

Bodrum Retreat, Oct 2011, Conversation begins midsentence with Sathyam talking to a gentleman.

Sathyam: I don't talk too much about disasters but, whoever has more of a male approach symbolically, their heart is closed, and I don't mean just men. And the things that I realized in that, after I contemplated on it, are that no war is ever won. If you go to war, you are going to have it be worst and worst until we realize that the remedy is not war. It is not like in the past where you passed through somewhere (territory), it became yours and you went home and celebrated by having a beer. It will never happen this way again.

The male energy had unconditional love, it was unifying and it had a very sharp sword to destroy with. To destroy what? To destroy the ignorance. Now, ignorance could be in a certain form in one place and in another form in another place. This is what I know for a fact, this is what I know in my heart, because I went through a series of realizations about this. And the Heart of the Mother that we have been celebrating for the past three years, it was because of that. I was told that we have to start emphasizing the Heart of the Mother.

And then I asked, 'How is the Heart of the Mother?' It can be in any being, it can be in any existence that is in harmony with the love of God, which is love.

A man asks: "Can we say that one age of Yoga is changing and going from Kali Yoga to another..."

Sathyam interrupts him and says: You can say that, but I would forget about that. What does that mean that one Yoga finishes and another begins? That way we are taking it as if we have no responsibility and the Yoga is changing whether we want it or not. If we don't we are destroyed, we have to understand the power of love, and the destructiveness of greed. We relied on 'I want and I will have,' and now we have to rely on 'I will give with all of my heart, not to myself but to others.' You can talk about the changing of the Yogas, but that is not how I got it. I got it that energy has descended and Baba and I witnessed it, and He made sure that I see it. He said, 'This is very important, don't take your eyes off of it.'

... There has always been war, the only difference now is that there will not be any victory; there will be a realization out of it.

On a different note:

Sathyam says: Isn't it nice that these young beautiful girls want to free themselves? It is truly something to be proud of.

The man asks what we can do practically and not personally.

Sathyam replies: We have to be silent. Silence is the remedy, just be quiet, don't do too much in the world. It is not a good time to invest your energy outside; the world needs our silence and our peace. It doesn't need us to get into the evolution of it.
